Turtle Crossing Rick Chrustowski

Five years after a female painted turtle hatches from her shell, she is ready to lay eggs of her own. This is a dangerous task because a road is between her home and the perfect nesting site. She reaches the site unharmed, but on her return trip a huge car hurtles her way. It stops just in time, and the kind people help her to safety. So the next time you see a TURTLE CROSSING sign, keep your eyes open - if you're lucky, you just might see a painted turtle on her way to make a nest.
