London Tanner's day just went from bad to worse.

She's fresh off the weekend and shows up to the job that she loves, and has dedicated herself to for the past 12 years. In the middle of checking emails, and preparing to begin her day, Carter Hampton enters her office space and requests her presence in his office. Once there, she finds herself on the other end of accusations of fraud that she firmly denies. After arguing her point for what seems like forever, she hears the words, "Today is your last day", pour from his mouth.

Defeated and broken, London decides to drop a bomb of her own, prior to her departure. Having had the last word, she leaves the building in tears and with her final paycheck in hand. With nowhere else to turn, she heads into the arms of the only person she knows can love her past the devastation.

London's boyfriend Brandon wants her to move to Southern California to begin a life with him, and now that she has no job to return to, she can do just that. However, as London prepares to leave the old life behind and enter a new phase, the unexpected occurs...the job wants her back.

Reluctantly, she takes them up on their offer. She still has unfinished business with the company she's given her all to—having been in their employ since she was eighteen. It's the only job she knows. However, London soon finds out that it's not just the company that wants her, but the very person to crush her world in the first place.

Carter Hampton reenters her life. It's not like she hadn't noticed him before, but now even more so...He's charismatic, attractive, and extremely wealthy—and his goal is to capture London's heart.

Not only does she have to deal with matters of the heart, there is also conflict within her own family that she must confront as well.

Her life becomes a tangled web that she must unweave. Will she figure it all out, or will the complexity of it all hold her captive?

This is BWWM fiction.
